PHANTASMAGORIA

What is it like when you lose yourself to love?

July 7th 9:45PM | July 9th 6:45PM
July 11th 3:45PM | July 12th 7:30PM

Al Green Theatre | 750 Spadina Avenue

NEAR&FAR Projects, in conjunction with associate producer Bri Clarke, premieres their newest work, Phantasmagoria, a show exploring the process by which one renounces themselves in pursuit of their beloved.

We follow two partners as they confront the reality of their now-tattered love, each struggling to remember who they were before the first flush of love took hold. Viewed through the eyes of “The Void”—an amorphous collective whose lone motivation it is to experience human feeling—Phantasmagoria offers a vignette of all that can be lost and gained in love, and reminds us how both strange and all-too-human a thing it is to feel.

It is Phantasmagoria's chief aim to have audience members introspect—to refer to their own experience as emotional beings, to allow themselves space to feel—as we move through this exploration of self-renouncement; as we explore what it is like when you lose yourself to love.
